TAZEWELL TELEGRAPH.

PERKIN, ILLINOIS, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1836. NUMBER 25.

VOLUME I.

PROSPECTUS

For publishing a monthly periodical, to be entitled the

COMMON SCHOOL ADVOCATE

AND JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

To be edited by an association of gentlemen.

The leading object of our proposed publication will be the promotion of Common Sympathy. By this however, we would not be understood as undervaluing the highest grades of education. The Common School, the Academy, and the College, are but so many links in the same great chain of Education, each of whom is necessary to the completeness and strength. It may even be asserted, without fear of contradiction, that neither can be permanently prosperous without the other. So far as it may be in our power, therefore, we expect to extend the helping hand to all.

But our chief attention will be devoted to Common Schools. And the design of the Advocate will be to serve the public mind, to make an effort in this all important cause by the presentation of facts—statistical facts—of text books—methods of teaching—the true system of education in our own country and the world, and by discussions of the whole system of Education generally. Particular attention will be devoted to Illinois—to the present condition of our population as to respect, schools—to the means of education which we have now at command or in prospect, and to the system best adapted to our peculiar circumstances—In short say thing that will tend to enlighten and elevate the teacher—and the statesman—to handle the trial of parents—or even the Citizens of Education, will find a welcome in the columns of the Advocate.

Our proposed undertaking, we commence with exclusive reliance upon Providence for help; before them for their patronage expect—to whom we all have a common interest—to belonge to no party in politics or rank in society—yet ever to speak the honest and impartial decision upon which we can all meet and join our efforts for the public good—not to be distinctly understood, however, that in the management of the paper we shall consider the great principles of the Bible as the best law of a free Republican Government.

The Eleventh Department will be commenced by a few literary gentlemen, who from their deep interest in this subject, have generously volunteered their services, without being at the present youth of Illinois, and its prospective greatness, and considering the vital and overwhelming importance of Education to it's future interests—as it is the most to expect that one small monthly sheet devoted to such a cause will receive ample patronage!

A small monthly paper are sent to all the schools in France and France, at the public expense.

PROSPECTUS.

In compliance with a wide-spread usage, the undersigned are introducing themselves to an enlightened public, deem it proper to present a brief sketch of their intentions.

The Tazewell Telegraph will be general in its character, so may be seen by the commission of the various subjects which it proposed to embrace.

Political Intelligence, State and General—where facts and doctrines of importance will be noticed without respect to party. In fearlessly maintaining their own views, the undersigned will ever maintain the rights of their opponents. The columns of this paper will be liberally opened to all temperate and well written communications.

Religious Intelligence, to the exclusion of the bigotry of sectarianism.

Agriculture and Commerce, the foundation of a permanent national prosperity, and Education, an essential ingredient in human happiness, will receive a due attention—and appreciate fully all the principles of freemen.

Domestic and Foreign News: the former embracing a digest of the most important events in every section of the Union the latter a summary of important political occurrences.

Literature, this will be an object entitled to a portion of our attention. Selections of new publications from other points, (to own state the Editors of the Telegraph construe) to review, they have not engaged to do so, but will endeavor to do justice to selections from periodicals, popular works, Poetry and Tales.

Markets: All the principal flags of Congress and of the Legislature, will be regularly published during the session of those respective bodies. Much interesting information, not usually contained in the reported proceedings is also anticipated, by occasional letters from private correspondents in the Legislature.

Lastly, it will be a permanent object to advocate sound morals, and the just interests of the State of Illinois.

For an exclusive report of those various objects, the undersigned are aware that they possess but few and limited qualifications, but they are prepared, however, that their short shall never be disgraced by the violation of personal sensitive nor the venom of party intelligence. It is therefore hoped that a portion of a people are eminently determined by the character, the tools and the time to which they aspire. The editor of this Telegraph will always have reference to this criterion.

DAILY COMMERCIAL BULLETIN

AND

MISSOURI LITERARY REGISTER.

WM. PETERS CAREY, Editorial Proprietor.

☞ The BULLETIN will hereafter be published every morning, (Sundays excepted,) at the city of St. Louis, on an extra imperial sheet of fine paper, with new type, at Ten Dollars per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

The Country, or Weekly Issue, containing all the original and selected matter, with the new advertisements of the day's paper will be issued every Saturday, at Three Dollars per annum payable in advance.

Though but fifteen months have elapsed since the commencement of the publication of the Bulletin, it has already an extensive and rapidly increasing circulation, together with an advertising patronage surpassed by but few papers in the Valley of the Mississippi. Devoted mainly to the interests of commerce, it will nevertheless, as heretofore, contain all the general news of the state of the commercial movements in the United States, and, so far as the limits of a daily paper is concerned, a full list of arrivals and departures of steamboats, their cargoes, names of passengers, &c.—a notice of strangers, and whoever may be in the city, and all other matters of interest.

The Literary Department will, occasionally, be embellished with such original matter, and such selections from various works as may seem adapted to the understanding and to gratify the refined and cultivated taste of the reader. Nothing indecorous, indelicate, or improper will be admitted, and it is to be constantly kept in view that the paper is to be for a million of general and useful information for the whole family circle.

In the discussion of the various political topics which distract the public mind at the present day, the Bulletin will take no part, but simply give its readers an opinion of the news of the day—therefore reserving to itself the right to express its own views when it shall deem it necessary.

Should short, twenty-five miles from Cincinnati, Ohio, on the Ohio and Erie Canal, Hamilton and Bloomington, and pass through Paris and Urbana, to the flourishing city of Sugar Creek, and—needed as the most and east by rolling and undulating prairie, to the flourishing city of Springfield, the contract that cannot be overlooked. In the private communications of Sugar Creek, and within one mile of Kickapoo, it has access to a variety of matter, which will be an assurance that it must be the center of very large subscription, of which the considerable population now await it in the future. The extensive position of Sugar Creek is sufficiently indicative to show that who have examined the advantages, that it must be the place of business, and the center of extensive population, while the above road from Springfield to Kickapoo, and the road from Portland to Sugar Creek, which passes through it, under it certain to be the most thoroughfare. The advantages have not been overlooked. Stores are already in operation, and preference can be easing within six months—and the proportion things nothing for like, erection of buildings, and the rapid settlement of the country in the forehand, and the source of extensive patronage which it will command. Sugar Creek will become, what from its position it is destined to be, at least a thriving and flourishing village.

GOODYEAR.

Tazewell county, Nov. 17, 1836.

In addition to what has been justly said by Goodyear, it would not be improper to say that Sugar Creek is the center of one of the richest bodies of timber in the state of Illinois, and is generally conceded to be the most healthy and desirable point in the county. Its central position, and the most rich and valuable land in the surrounding country, together with the many advantages, and are about to meet, will make it the point of the county, and the point of commerce.

Persons are respectfully invited to call and examine our goods and prices, as we hope to please all who may favor us with a call.

All of the above are bid will be sold low for cash, or on country produce exchange.

BROOKS & COGSWELL.

Nov. 22, 1836.—tf

To the Honorable, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Illinois:

THE petition of sundry citizens of the county of Tazewell, and State aforesaid, humbly represents, that your petitioners, as a majority of them, have been subject to much inconvenience in travelling to and from their County of Justice, by reason of the peculiar location of the County Seat, and believing that a removal of the County Seat would be productive of the highest benefit materially conducive to the convenience and relief the population of a large portion of the citizens of the county aforesaid, your petitioners would therefore pray that your honorable bodies will take into consideration this petition and relieve your petitioners by establishing the County Seat at Cincinnati, a point at or near the geographical centre of the county.

Your petitioners would further represent, that your petitioners now petition for the relief sought for under the impression that the County Seat is made by your honorable bodies. The importance of said seat of Government, and do agree to do the 23 lots in said town in the county of Tazewell, for the purpose of erecting a Court House and defraying other county expenses.

And whereas your petitioners, from many years residence in said county of Tazewell, were induced to sign a petition asking your honorable bodies for a location of said county seat, which petition was presented to your honorable bodies that they do hereby also sign this petition, and do not consider that the Seat of Justice be permanently established at Pekin, but that it be located at or near the centre of the county.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

THE BRIDAL EVE.

A TALE OF MODERN IN THE OMAHA TRIBE.

From the Boston Post.

"——But who art thou,
With the shadowy locks o'er thy pale young brow?"

And the word of dreamy poesie that lies
In one misty depth of thy soft dark eyes?
Thou hast loved, fair girl, thou hast lov'd too well
Thy cost incurring now o'er a broken spell—
Thou hast loved and thy heart is wrung asunder forth,
And art stripped for thy priceless work."
HEMANS.

In a retired cottage in the rear of Washington street, and near the corner of the beautiful old South, stands a venerable pile, surrounded by the shade of a grove of some of the finest, yet known as the Province House. Here, in the days of yore was held the head quarters of the commander-in-chief of England's colonial forces. Yes, that antiquated old mansion, where now dwells the real and important old' rosette to enjoy its "ease, and dignified repose," was once with Bible's learned, was, in olden time, the presence chamber of royalty and nobleness.

Since the months after the incident we are relating, were united round the table in the mansion, a few gay young officers of the British army. Oh, and hilarity seemed to reign triumphant. Among the number, on the first occasion, and last I believe, of the kind that became that divine to an inhabitant of the house, he must have been pronounced the jolliest one of the group.

"My Lord Howard, young Col. G., a most melody, jovial fellow, whose name is held in high esteem wherever he was known, and a favorite with the ladies, I ween, for he seemed in great familiar ease. You always got the basic document as the first word out of his mouth, and your will never gain a damsel's heart, by courting first the lady's pocket."

"Ours be the land, my good major; my word weakened by such words it must needed. Those yankee chaps are only British subjects when they accept the creed as nothing else. But let us drop this, and wash the bottle of the fair Miss B., and our good Lord Admiral, and Governor Hutchinson, for I think, which, thank heaven, will be our bright spot in our dark career."

We leave this merry company and return to the opening of the door. Seated on a settee in his apartment is the youthful messenger, Eugene. But two months have elapsed since the night we left Arthur S. and the lovely Miss B., her father's mansion was filled with fair ladies and gay officers of the king, and the bright lamps shone over bright wave of the ocean. Sweet music filled the hall, and proud figures, clad in scarlet and gold, blended with those of virgin whiteness, tilted through the many figures of the gaily glass. All present appeared joyful and light hearted save one. In the recess of a window, in the shade of the drapery, stood a young man, of some twenty-five years of age, with a countenance pale as the snow before him. The setting melody that floated through the hall, lost apartment, and the ringing laugh of youth, fell not as glad tones on his ear—there was no room for those bright emotions in the somewhat heart of that lone boy.

The hour of the morrow drew near, but silence on the happy lo ge for whom this night was to be a night of joy, and the future the sister of the gardens at a youthful couple, commenced to fade away. Eugene was aroused from some many thousand dreams of the future, and what high and happy hopes, ranged their dominions, by the noise of that young man's voice, as he waited for at the door. The aged father of the young man, commander of the 64th Regiment—"Tell the messenger that the hour is at hand." Such was the order that was received from a dreamer he looked around with a wild amazement, but quickly recovered himself, and recently bore, I'm!" The aged supercargo called on deck and were soon in the midst of a frightful scene, of mutiny and slaughter.

"I'm he sir," was the reply of the youth, as he bowed to the door for the messenger to enter. The fair Emma B. had long since lost all interest in the world, and the sight of the messenger but fanned into a brighter flame the sorrowful feelings that had long since chilled over the certainty that the cup of happiness was dashed from her trembling hands, as we easily invites as made.

The great Current Claim.—It is well known that a new era to an immense tract of country, started under the auspices of the Illinois Central Railroad. The founders of the claim are Mr. Huntington. The founders of the claim are Mr. Huntington.

In the year—No 1847, John Carver, a native of Massachusetts, of a speculative and speculative disposition, undertook to explore the western country, which had been recently acquired by the Eagles from the Indians. He left his native village, Plymouth, and a year or two in examining the country. He travelled through the valley of the Mississippi, and became particularly pleased with the fertile shores of the meagre inhabitants. He left Plymouth, and established a line of communication between that place and Boston. He then began a shortly said and took route for the Mississippi, a town of land, boundary line of which commenced at the falls of St. Anthony and went down the river to the mouth of the Ohio a journey west, to neither expected him. Carver was not to be daunted by it, and three journeys was undertaken to secure about twenty acres. Having purchased the claim from the Indians it is said that Carver went to England and obtained a grant of land from the English government. The town of Carver, which bears his name, is supposed to be the basis of an independent state, comprising, as it does, the counties of square miles of fertile country. Carver died in England. It flies near the greatest mining district in the world, and is destined to become the most beautiful inland town on. Not withstanding the government grant, the claim was not as much as regarded that that of many Europeans. Carver died in England in 1793, in a state of almost destitution. He left a widow and two children, who were also in poverty.

So out of his descendants may still be Charles and Montague, in the State of Massachusetts. Many of the descendants of Carver are now reputably living grave during the last fifty years by birth is believed to number thousands and a number of townships on the tract have lately or will soon be established by the settlers. The wisest confidence is felt by many in the validity of the claim, and at any rate the grant is sufficiently special to be well worth a contest. The beautiful Mercury, from which we glean most of these particulars, states, that some contentment exists in some parts of the country in consequence of the delay in the great land claim, which the recent settlement of the affairs of the state will soon put to rights.

Items.—Some persons that have Beaching with Father Mathew, and might be taken in and some weeks after they have been consuming the luxury in the bins. The town pause to peruse the history as fast as they can, it rather in the season than is generally supposed. They have after the list of supervisors means they have access to Beekwheat that is in bloom. They will not generally reflect lately enough to support them in the year last week in August unless the weather is very favorable to their laboring, and the season is wet, so as to keep a supply of honey in the flowers.

LOSS OF THE SHIP BRISTOL, AND SIXTY-SEVEN LIVES.

In our paper of yesterday we announced the loss of the ship, and expressed fears that some other vessel had met with a similar fate. Mr. Hunter, one of the owners of the ship, arrived last evening at an early hour from the wreck, and gave us the following authentic account of the loss:

The ship Bristol arrived off Sandy Hook pilot on Sunday evening at nine o'clock, and not seeing any pilot boat, stood off at II o'clock. Highland Light bearing N. W. by W. At a quarter before 8am. A. M., she struck on Fat Rockaway Bar, and was soon to state that three cables and sixty shackles of chain were carried out to the windward of the. The names of the cabin passengers are Mr. Hunter, the owner, and his wife and Michael Hunter, a son of the owner.

The Bristol was a new vessel of about 1,000 tons burden, and was commanded by Capt. Nathaniel Crowell, who, with about sixty-seven persons on board, was lost.

Those that came on shore describe the intolerable sufferings of the crew, almost benumbed by exposure. Mothers calling to their children, and children to their parents, were all on the mast were they were lashed in the shrouds. The following is the list, viz: S. M. Morgan, the wind blowing a gale from the N. E. and no sign of relief, the boats lost in the wind and sea, the vessel filled with passengers perished on deck and were washed overboard by the waves, or died in the cabin beside their apartments. The cabin passengers were all saved, except Mr. Hunter, who perished off, at which time Captain Mackey was in his own power, by which the majority of the passengers were saved, with many steerage passengers. The ship had been previously stripped of her latest advices. The passengers saved, but nothing in what they stood in. Their trunks, which had decked with the ship, were all lost. Captain Crowell "became their chronometer" as above, and then on the fatal morning. The ship was sold for $34,000 in this city, so we learn the greater part of her cargo—the remainder owned in England.

SCENES IN PARIS—A VICTIM OF THE GUILLOTINE—FATAL EFFECTS OF GAMING—SUICIDE OF AN UNFORTUNATE YOUTH.

A horrible murder had been committed at the old gardener of Prince Albert was present. Francois Ubrek was deeply enamoured with Aimee Milet, a young shopkeeper of the Rue Montmartre. The following are the circumstances accurate in the course of their intimacy, which promised the prelude of the happiest connubial union.

Ubrek, though the son of a rich proprietor, sought the young girl to the fields and the public promenades, where he was also deeply excited to be smitten by my gentle-ladies to the century. Neither his own parents nor those of his mistress knew of the new instant from his purpose; and even still the unhappy Aimee kept it in his feet to the last week in August, when she was informed by visions of innocence fell from her blushful lips, the intimate nullion plunged a dagger to her heart.

Although exceedingly left in possession of witness a public execution, the melancholy spectacle was denied to be held in last year's Champ de Mars, and I proceeded to Montrouge that we should not get on the Place de Greve, where the guillotine was erected. We reached the Hotel de Ville. The gallows was already erected on a high platform in front of the Hotel de Ville, and the Place de Greve was thronged with an immense multitude, and the Rue de la Ferronnerie was completely filled from the Rue St. Denis to the Rue St. Jacques. The silence of the morning was broken by the sound of the drum, and the procession began to move. The criminal was placed in a cart, and the executioner's assistants were seated on the same vehicle. The cart was preceded by a detachment of gendarmerie, and followed by another detachment of the same corps. The criminal was dressed in a white shirt, and his hands were tied behind his back. He was pale, but appeared resigned. He looked around him with a wild and haggard look, as if he were searching for some one in the crowd. He was not disappointed. His eyes rested on the countenance of his father, who was standing on the steps of the Hotel de Ville. The unfortunate young man looked at him for a moment, and then, as if overcome by the sight, he bowed his head, and remained in that position until the cart stopped at the foot of the scaffold.

The criminal, with a wild, yet calm look, then ascended the steps of the scaffold, and, in a few seconds, was bound to the fatal plank. The executioner then pushed the plank forward, and the head of the unfortunate criminal fell into the lunette. The executioner then severed the head from the body with one stroke, and, taking it by the hair of the head, showed it to the people. The head was then placed in a basket, and the body, with the head in the basket, was placed in a cart, and conveyed to the cemetery of Montmartre, where it was interred.

The execution of Francois Ubrek was the first that had taken place in Paris for many years, and the concourse of people was immense. The number of persons present on the occasion was estimated at from 20,000 to 30,000.

SUICIDE.

In passing near the Palais that evening, I looked at my watch, and finding it too early to go home, resolved to kill an hour in one of the cafés on the Boulevard. I entered the first place by the dark arch entrance, the noble light of the mirrors which are ranged all the way round the room, and the brilliant lamps which illuminate the ceiling, had dazzled me for a moment, and I looked around me with a feeling of pleasure.

The first object that struck me was a young man, who appeared to be about twenty-five years of age, and who was sitting at a table with a bottle of wine before him, and a pistol in his hand. He was looking at the pistol with a fixed attention, and seemed to be examining the priming. I was struck with the appearance of this young man, and I could not help thinking that he was about to commit suicide. I therefore resolved to watch him, and I sat down at a table near him, and called for a bottle of wine. I had not been seated more than a minute when I saw him put the pistol to his head, and fire. I sprang from my seat, and ran to him, but he was dead before I reached him. The ball had entered his temple, and he had fallen back upon the seat, and remained in that position. The waiters and the people in the cafe crowded round the body, and I left the place, and proceeded to the Palais Royal. I had not been there above a few minutes, when I was accosted by a young man, who said that he had been present when I had witnessed the suicide, and that he had followed me to the Palais Royal, in order to request me to go to the police office, and give information of the circumstances. I have already been up and down the best of seven and the holidays! Prior to my leaving England, for this country, I sold my commission; for pursuit, some money, together with the amount of pounds, constituting the whole of my worldly fortune. I have remained at the premises with Miss Arrington.

"Curiously not," he replied, "this at last, but not less welcome to me than the strangest of strangers."

We parted. Seduced by the melancholy tale of the stranger, I gave up my intention number of those detesting cups—One was enough for me. I walked out, retired to my room a few minutes, and then, with a cigar in my mouth, and a stout stick in my hand, I sallied forth to see if I could find a cafe in the Palais Royal. I had not been long there before I met with a cafe which pleased me. It was of the right genus, and I seated myself at one of the tables with a glass of punch before me, and a cigar of gold that were lying before the door. At length, with a desperate effort, he rose from the table, and, staggering to the door, he fell down upon the pavement, and there remained, to all appearance, dead. He was carried into the cafe, and I followed him. I ordered a glass of punch, and sat down to watch the proceedings of the people around the body. They were not long in coming to a decision. They declared that he was dead, and that he had died from the effects of drinking. Some afterwards went last week, and at that time he was in a beggar. A thousand thanks, however, to the kind friend who sent me the paper, for the notice of Miss Arrington.

Persecution Cops.—It would be well for the public to be aware of the many accidents that have been occasioned by the careless use of fire-crackers, and to take proper precautions to prevent the occurrence of such accidents as are constantly taking place.

Noble Generosity.—Capt Edward Wilson, of this city, was on board the Royal Tar, on the banks of Newfoundland, on a voyage to Quebec, when he received an account of the death of his father, who resided in a neighboring state, but his estate and stock, passed into the hands of his brother, who, on receiving the news, immediately left the ship, and, with the rapidity of a steamboat, hastened to the residence of his father, where he found his brother in possession of the property. He immediately informed him that he had no claim upon it, and that he would not remain in the house, but would return to his ship. He then left the house, and returned to his

THE Governor's Message has been received, but too late for insertion this week. The very cursory perusal we have had leaves us yet to see it, forbids the extension of any detailed opinion of its merits. We understand that while spoken of favourably by many, it is condemned by others for length, and the unprofitable of too much of the contents in the discussion of National Politics.

The Telegraph of to-day contains a well-written article from his friend the Illinois State Journal, condemning a mass of historical and other anti-social information rarely conferred with the public at any season. We hope the writer will continue a subject so profitable to the community at large.

We are indebted to a much esteemed friend, for the use of the interesting letter from Vandalia, published in our columns. Intelligence of a later date, announces the election of Mr. Davison, to the Presiding Office of the Senate.

VANDALIA, Dec. 7, 1836.

Dear Sir.—On my arrival at this place I found the State House in an unfinished state, so much so, that little or no business will be transacted for the present. On Monday the two branches of the Legislature assembled at the usual hour, at the new State House for the purpose of choosing their respective boobies.

The House of Representatives succeeded in electing, on the 5th ballot, James Shields, of Madison county, their Speaker; Dawn Prescott, of Sangamon county, assistant Speaker; Clerk, ——— Lee, of Edgar, register; Sing and swalling Clerk, ——— Wiltman. Door-keeper, ———.

The Senate not yet organized, three days have been spent in balloting for Speaker and no choice is yet made, the candidates are Messrs. Wm. Kinney, of Monroe, and Davison, of White county. The vote being equally divided no one seems willing to relinquish his favorite candidate. I am, however, disposed to think that on the next trial a choice will be made. No business has, as yet, been transacted, neither is the structure of the State House set being in readiness, and the Senate not having organized. The Governor's message of course is not yet been received.

The Election for President and Vice President will be called during the first session to-day at 2 o'clock, P. M., and cast their votes for the candidates for whom they were elected to vote for.

From what I have been able to learn during the short space of time I have been here, the Legislature will be engaged for a long session of internal improvements are in contemplation, among which is the great central rail road from the termination of the canal on the waters of the Ohio, through the centre of the state. The route will be chiefly extended first by the commissioners, which I conceive to be the system of internal improvement to be adopted at the present session, it must be a general one, one whose every portion of the state will be benefited by it.

The internal improvement convention so near to Kaskaskia, the Capital, of Sparsgold, has been almost President, many resolutions have been offered which are pondering some days. A committee has been appointed by the president to draft an address to the people; what further may be the result of their deliberations I am unable to say.

Will respect,

Your obedient serv't.

[FROM THE TELEGRAPH.]

Mr. Editor.—In looking over your paper of the 13th ult. I see a communication signed by "one of the people of Tallula," in reply to "Fairfax," professes to be "one who must prefer to retain a silent observer of passing events than to be a participant in the raving strife and contentious which keeps the community in agitation." As he is "one of the Fraternity" we expect to enjoy the benefits of it; in reply he should be a object of Tallula's animadversions she ought to have and to the Fraternity in the language of uncle Toby, "go pass it——" the world is wide enough for them and me," and to be true publicly and openly assailed after the manner of the communication before mentioned, and as "others must fall under the same unmerited reproach," with those who have identified themselves with some of the Fraternity" they by party or reason should be subject to the like "scandalous" and no nobody in which one of the constituents spoke as not considered can either be permanent or useful; ergo, matriotism is to an unsocial constituent of the better and vigor of a good and a permanent population as the ancient elements which compose a wholesome and substance citizens.

If the position I have assumed be true, and I [illegible] the assistency of a Fraudulent support; [illegible] are all the reasons to assign, slavery, enemies to both parties of mankind and a good and permanent population! If my Tallula's remarks through party, perhaps party is the same with the sources of those of the Fraternity" are nevertheless true, and if true ought to be supported of. Oh! what the way in our body that it might be removed by one and the same remedy! How [illegible] Fraternity" takes out his appointment to be at home amply and honorable in him to act about remedying the evil then as soon, differently to party or Fraternity, and not to be compared to the situation of the deranged old bachelor, who is wearing the middle Speed off of his coat by walking around the house from and ten, with nothing else to do, while whose youth has been subjected to those rural pursuits of joy as he had better be getting rewarded.

I will tell him a story which was enacted in contemporaneous with the settlement of the founders of the imperial city of Rome in carrying of the Sabine hills, I allude to the rape of Tarpeian Virgins. The Romans went to the island of Crete as a tribute upon exacting no one dressed, by the consent of Dolphin, in exercise to the Romans, and [illegible] as also to the Cretan Virgins by Dendre and going out by the request of the cities given in by the faithful attendant. The Romans [illegible] to sacrifice a goat in honor of his married consequence now would not a fine sacrifice of none of the Romans to the Cretan Virgins, to oppress the just result of the injured community by very desirable. More anon.

"The goddess Hesta was worshipped by the Romans, as the goddess of perpetuity."

Heathen Mythology

[FROM THE PEORIA JOURNAL & COM. ADVER.]

We have considered it of so small a form as possible a history of Illinois, which we long desire to introduce to the public, and we beg leave to introduce it to them by a few observations. We do not think of nothing at this time, better calculated to interest, at this present period of our history, than a work written by settled by our age; than such a synopsis. We cannot but think that the many things that has not been before published by Drs. Peck and others, will be found very useful to be inserted so much, that our little history may be read with pleasure and profit to our readers. We wish it brief, and though not be as full as possible, we shall be careful to give nothing of the sketches though several of no small interest. Our present will contain the early history of the Illinois country, which was settled by the Catholics to its admission as a state into the Federal Union.

The French residents in Canada were of the opinion that a western route to the Pacific ocean could be discovered. To effect this they employed Louis Joliet and Father Marquette with one Indian. After journeying a year or more, they arrived at the river Illinois, and descended the Mississippi river to the Missouri. They were supposed to have been to the river Illinois, and to have made the discovery of the latter of considerable importance by the Canadians to its admission as a state into the Federal Union.
